Bill McKinney,
Thrivent Financial,
VP Strategy &
Long-term Development

In this session, we will share a point of view on why so few white men are true D&I champions. Our goal is to initiate a new conversation about the institutional and individual changes required to create real change in our organizations and in society. We will raise awareness, deepen understanding, and develop individual action plans for every participant to move the important work of enlisting, engaging, and supporting white men as D&I leaders.

Learning Outcomes:

- Participants will be able to identify four distinct levels of white male engagement and effective strategies for moving them forward as champions.
- Participants will expand their personal toolkit for engaging white men and get real-time feedback on their skills via small group discussions.
- Participants will identify specific opportunities in their own organizations and develop a personal action plan to pursue when they return home.

Each key stakeholder in the organization plays a significant but, yet different role in D&I success. Join us for our Key Stakeholder Development Journey webinar: “Many Lanes, One Destination”, REGISTER NOW: kgdiversity.com/KSDJ
